Time management games and activities are fun, enjoyable, but also eye-opening, as they correlate to your real-life time management games and activities you can play, both at the office or at home, and on your devices. What are time management games? A time management game is a video or real-life game you can play alone or in a group - these games require you to meet certain objectives, in a specific order, but with limited time and resources. Most of these games are fast-paced and require you to plan and strategize, in order to use the limited resource and time as effectively as you can, before meeting the required objectives. A crucial benefit of these time management games is that most of the time, you'll be able to hone the skills you learn by playing them, to solve real-life work challenges. Why play time management games, both the video and the real-life variety: They improve your reaction time Considering that these games are fast-paced, they help improve your reflexes - unless you're able to react on time to the challenges in the game, you cannot progress. They'll help you perfect your planning and strategies, in order to reach the later stages of the game, you'll also improve your real-life organizational and planning skills. They improve your teamwork abilities Considering that most of the segmes require you to collaborate with your friends and colleagues.
They improve your resource management Considering that these games require that you use the resources you have in an effective manner in order to progress, you'll likely develop a good sense for resource management in real life as well. They help you understand the importance of time management Last but not least, most time management games are designed to help you understand the importance of time management and help you reassess your work routine. For example, they can help you assess how your perception of time, organizational skills, and the understanding of whether your assess how your perception of time management games (for team buildings) Here are 14 engaging time management games and activities you can easily play with your team at the office - even when you experience Internet downtime or a blackout: How long is a minute? Great for: Figuring out how you and your colleagues perceive time How it's played: Bring people to a room with no clocks (or where all the clocks are covered) Take away their phones and watches Instruct them to open their eyes before the 60 seconds are up and some will open them after. This game will help you better estimate the time it takes you to finish projects and tasks because you'll understand how well you perceive time, to begin with. Circadian Rhythm Great for: Recognizing optimal time for work How it's played: Instruct your colleagues to plan a day in their life, from waking up to going to sleepTell them to take each period of the day and write a letter showing their energy levels next to it: A - High energy B - Autopilot control C - 70% energy level D - Distracted E - Slowing down for the day, so you'll be able to make better decisions about your schedules. Your team will learn when they should work on important, challenging tasks (during "High energy" time), when they should tackle less important work (during "Autopilot control" time or "70% energy level" time), and when they should simply take a break (during "Distracted" time). You can even post all your completed charts on a wall, so everyone will know when to call their co-workers, and for what type of tasks. The Circadian Rhythm game is based on the time management techniques. What I did yesterday Great for: Finding a link between work performance and activities How it's played: First, ask people at the office to write down 10 things they did vesterday while at workThen, ask people to write 5 things they expect to see on their next performance reviewLook over the two lists for each person together, and make links between list itemsAdditional step: Have people rank the 10 things they did yesterday in terms of importance and urgency What you'll learn: Many people will try to find indirect links between the things they did, and what they expect to be praised for in reviews, in order to justify their activities. In the end, you'll likely find that you spend too much time on activities that don't impact your expected performance. Colored blocks to work and place them on a tableAssign value to the blocks based on their color (blue = 1, green = 2, red = 3, etc.)Instruct the co-workers to gather as many points as possible in 60 seconds, by picking up one block at a time, but only with their non-dominant hand What you'll learn: How to prioritize blocks in order to get the highest score – in the office, this translates to urgent and important tasks you need to prioritize and tackle every day in order to finish your work properly. Race to the Ace of Spades Great for: Understanding the important tasks you need to prioritize and tackle every day in order, from aces to kings, and all facing the same directionYou mix up the second deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers, and have each pick one deck of cards and jumble them up so they don't all face the same directionPick two volunteers. the organized deck will find the Ace of Spades much faster, and the volunteer with the jumbled up deck will likely complain about the unfairness of the game What you'll learn: The organized deck represents working on tasks in an organized the unfairness of the game with the jumbled up deck will likely complain about the unfairness of the game with the jumbled up deck represents working on tasks in an organized. scheduled - the advantage of an organized, time blocked schedule should be obvious in the end. Time Squared Great for: Identifying time wasters and extra time you didn't even know you could have How it's played: Give your co-workers 3 pieces of printed paper with 24 squares representing 24 hours in a dayWhen you hand them the first paper, instruct them to fill out the squares with routine activities they perform every day, such as sleeping (e.g. 3 X 1 squares), eating (e.g. 3 X 1 squares), eating the squares with the non-productive activities they perform at the office, such as private calls, coffee-breaks, etc. When you hand them the third paper, instruct them to compare the first two papers, and mark the empty squares What you'll learn: The marked empty squares represent the time opened for productive activities – your team will be able to identify unnecessary time wasters and how they can minimize them in order to leave more room for important activities. "Big Picture" puzzle challenge Great for: Understanding the importance of having clear goals in mind when planning activities How it's played: Give your team a puzzle and instruct them to solve it as quickly as possible, but don't provide them with the "Big picture" that shows the finished puzzleInterrupt their process after 5 minutes, and ask them: "What makes this task difficult?" They'll likely tell you that the problem is not knowing the expected outcome for the puzzleGive them the "Big picture" to continue, and see how they speed up and finish much faster What you'll learn: Knowing where you're supposed to end up, makes planning the steps that will take you there much easier. Unless you have the "Big picture" of a task that shows how the task relates to the project, it'll be harder to figure out whether you should find different priorities. $86,400 Great for: Emphasizing the importance of using time wisely How it's played: Each member of your team is given $86,400 to spend within a dayYou can't carry over what you didn't spend today to tomorrow — anything you don't spend is lostHave everyone write down what activities they want to spend this money on What you'll learn: The $86,400 you are given to spend are actually 84,600 seconds you have per day — so, instead of money, it's actually time that you won't be able to retrieve tomorrow if you lose it today. This game will help you and your team understand how well you're spending your time now (in relation to how you'd spend the amount of $84,000 and whether you'd waste any of it) and how you can best take back control of your time in the future. The Ribbon of Life Great for: Helping your team understand how much time you all have at your disposal to reach success How it's played: You take a ribbon that's 100cm long and a pair of scissors. Ask your players about their estimation of the expected lifespan of an individual. The answer may depend on the country you're living in, so let's assume that you're operating in the United States where people have an average lifespan of 79 years and that your team is aware of this piece of information. Cut off 21cm from your ribbon, to get 79cm. Take the average age of your team into consideration: the weekends (2 days X 52 weeks X 49 years / 365 days = 14 years/cm)public holidays (e.g. 10 days per year in the US X 49 years / 365 days = 1.3 years/cm)sick and other leave (e.g. 7 days on average in the US X 49 years / 365 days = 1 year/cm)sleeping (e.g. 8 hours per day x 365 x 49 / 24 / 365 = 16.3 years/cm)eating (e.g. 2 hours per day x 365 \times 49 / 24 / 365 = 4 years/cmcommuting (e.g. 1 hour both ways x 365 \times 49 / 24 / 365 = 2 years/cm). In the end, subtract these years from your lifespan and cut off these centimeters from your ribbon. The remaining length of the ribbon is the amount you have left to succeed in life. What you'll learn: Time is precious and you have a finite number of years to succeed in what you're pursuing, so put those years to good use. Delegation Skill Practice Great for: Teaching your team how better to delegate tasks How it's played: Divide your team into smaller teams of three people: the delegator the employee the observer Instruct the "delegator" to define the most unpleasant task they usually have to perform at workHave the "delegator" delegate this task to an "employee" and explain itGive the "observer" a sheet of paper to write down notes about the points to go over while working on the delegated taskDiscuss how well the task was explained on a subteam levelPlay three rounds of this game, to give everyone a chance to play all three rolesDiscuss how well the tasks you are delegating. Second, you'll all be able to learn from each other about the best delegation practices and approaches. The Mayonnaise Jar Lesson Great for: Teaching the team to understand the importance of scheduling their priority tasks first How it's played: You'll need a jar, some golf balls, and sand, divide people into teams, and instruct them to perform the task themselves). The gist is simple — you need to add the pebbles, golf balls, and sand to the jar. The correct order is adding the golf balls first, then the pebbles, then the jar. other items, and you likely won't be able to fit everything else. By adding the golf balls represent your priority tasks. The pebbles represent your less important tasks. The pebbles afterward, you show that you also have the tendency to save some time for other important tasks in your life. Sand represents unimportant tasks in your life you'll never have time for what is truly important tasks, you'll never have time for what is truly important tasks, you'll never have time for what is truly important tasks that can always wait. If you fill your days with unimportant tasks, you'll never have time for what is truly important tasks, you'll never have time for what is truly important tasks. the team how to analyze what their priorities are How it's played: Everyone is given a pen and paper — the task is to imagine being trapped on a desert islandSet a time limit — for example, two minutesDuring this time, everyone should write down what they would bring to a desert islandAll items deemed as essential by the group will bring them pointsAll tasks not deemed as essential by the group will bring the player no points What you'll learn: Every player will get a chance to learn how to quickly assess what their priorities/essentials in work are. You'll learn to be more careful about assigning your time blocks to unessential tasks, just as you should be careful about what you're bringing to a desert island (if given the option to choose). The Blind Polygon Great for: Helping improve everyone's organizational and analytical skills How it's played: The players are divided into smaller groups and given a ropeEach group will have a leader and will need to organize the rope into a shape specified by the said group's leader — but, they'll need to do so while blindfoldedNo one is allowed to take off the blindfold — moreover, all the members of the team need to be touching the rope at all times during the taskReplay the game a couple of times — the groups will have more difficulties in the first round, but, they'll eventually learn to work together, despite the lack of sight and the need for constant coordination What you'll learn: You'll learn: You'll learn how to better work together, analyze tasks from different angles, and organize your work in such a way that helps you reach desired results — even if you don't have all the necessary data (i.e. if you are "blindfolded" in some way). Time Wasters Great for: Learning how best to deal with time wasters How it's played: Divide the players into 4 teamsProvide each team with an envelope, they'll find 4 index cards. At the back of the envelope, they'll find a specific time-wasterEach group needs to write down solutions for the assigned time-wasterEach group needs to write them down on the first index cards. can overcome specific time-wasters, and save more time for priority tasks in the future. Online time management video games Apart from the "offline" time management games you can play or download online. You can play them in single-player management genre, but it remains one of the more popular examples. In this game, you play Flo, a hard worker who buys an old diner and has to make enough money to fix it up and expand her business. Diner Dash Gameplay: Essentially, you'll be performing tasks around your restaurant: as customers arrive at the restaurant, you drag and drop them to their tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, put the orders to the "service hatch", and once the chef is done prepare and give them to their tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, put the orders to the "service hatch", and once the customers are finished eating, you prepare and give them to their tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, put the orders to the "service hatch", and once the customers are finished eating, you prepare and give them to their tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, put the orders to the "service hatch", and once the customers are finished eating, you prepare and give them to take their orders, put the orders to the "service hatch", and once the customers are finished eating, you prepare and give them to take their orders, and you have to clear the tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, and you have to clear the tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, and you have to clear the tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders, and you have to clear the tablesyou guide Flo to take their orders. show their mood – the longer they wait the more hearts they lose, and when they're out of hearts, they leave the restaurant and you lose points In all tasks, accuracy and speed are key – you earn points for all successful tasks, and if you perform the same set of tasks fast, you get combo bonuses. You also get color bonuses, if you manage to match customers and seats by color. If you earn enough money from checks and tips in one level, you progress to the next, and once you progress enough, you'll be able to open up new restaurants and expand the game setting. You can choose between two game modes: Career mode – you follow and help Flo's careerEndless shift – you must last as long as possible in a single frantic level Cake Mania Collection Steam rating:  6/10 Platforms: Web, PC, Adobe Flash Player mode: Single-player Game overview: Cake Mania is a series of games where you guide the baker Jill Evans, as she bakes cakes, runs her own bakery, and deals with tricky customers asked for before the customers grow impatient and leaveyou can use cupcakes and television to entertain customers and stop them from leaving too soon You can use the money you earn in the game to buy a new oven, a better frosting machine, a microwave, or faster shoes to help Jill keep up with her work. The default concept is simple, but you can spice it up a little by playing in "Bakers Challenge" mode that allows management subgenre, one that enhances the original concept - you and your team of up to 3 additional players have to serve a variety of recipes, such as pasta, cakes, burgers, and sushi to customers in a limited amount of time, all while cooking in unusual kitchen settings and dealing with obstacles. Overcooked! 2 Gameplay: The game essentially follows the usual cooking game principle, but you have to do the cooking in absurd and unexpected kitchens (such as Wizard schools): you'll need to coordinate orders and streamline teamwork – otherwise, you'll also have to deal with fires, moving floors, portals, and changing settings - one especially memorable level has you preparing salads while flying in a hot air balloon before you conveniently crash in a sushi kitchen When compared to the original game, this sequel offers additional interactive levels, restaurant themes, elaborate chef costumes, more cooking techniques, and more exciting recipes to prepare while the kitchen (usually) crumbles around you. Burger Shop 2 Steam rating:  9/10 Platforms: Web, PC, iOS, Android, Mac Player mode: Single-player Game overview: Burger Shop has aliens sending you the blueprint of a machine that creates food from nothing, so you build a successful restaurant - the sequel Burger Shop 2 has you waking up in a dumpster to discover your restaurant chain has been put out of business, and you don't remember why. But no matter what, it's time you rebuild your burger kingdom. Burger Shop 2 Gameplay: This is another game that requires fast and innovative thinking, as well as a good organization system: cook for and serve your regular clientele in a speedy manneradd twists to your menu to attract new customers by upgrading your kitchen to serve pancakes, pasta, steak, cakes, pizzas, and more. To spice up the usual cook-and-serve-as-fast-as-you-can formula, you'll also have to look forward to solving the mystery of what happened to your original burger shop. Food Tycoon FRVR is another great 2D addition to the restaurant time management game genre — you'll need to prepare meals, drinks, and desserts, as well as serve them as fast as you can, all in order to earn enough money to create a respectable food brand. You'll get to manage food trucks, restaurants, and coffee shops, and work your way up to a legit restaurant empire. Food Tycoon FRVR Gameplay: In gist, you'll need to make and serve beverages and meals across several venues: Tap on the ingredients and machines in the right order to make the beverages and meals, and then serve them to the awaiting customersGetting the orders right brings you coins (you'll have a goal to earn a certain number of coins for each level) — you can then exchange these coins for gemsWhen you pass certain levels you'll be able to unlock special boosters, as well as new ingredients, beverages, and mealsNew levels also bring new customers will have their own, new orders to task you withThe more you progress, the more challenging it will get, as the number of customers and orders will increase As you earn money and grow your pool of satisfied customers, you'll get to open new venues across the town and grow your business further. something about your time management abilities, and identify your weak areas. "Offline" time estimation whether what you usually do at work leads to your expected performancerecognize how important it is to properly prioritize, manage time, and organize your work Playing video time management games can be equally eye-opening. If you find that you're having trouble seating customers, serving orders, planning your next crop harvest, or organizing planes, this may be an indication that your real-life organization/planning/time management skills need work. Also, multiplayer games may indicate how resourceful you are in teamwork, and whether you're a skilled communicator and collaborator. Overall, playing time management games from time to time is a welcome practice to help you better understand your work and life habits - just make sure you play the listed video games in moderate doses and don't exchange your real life for a virtual one
